Call for Papers

This broad-ranging conference will assume good reading and its concomitant good writing to be essential both to the mastery of disciplinary content and to the transformative potential of an education in literary studies. We seek papers that consider reading and writing from a range of perspectives, practical and theoretical.

Selected papers will be published in special issue of a peer-reviewed journal.

Deadline for submissions EXTENDED to 10 February 2017

Please send 250-word proposals for papers, panels, or workshops, together with a 75-word bio, to readingwritingtheorypractice@gmail.com, using the subject line Reading and Writing cfp.
